GCS-GLOBAL CONSULTING SOLUTIONS

Consultant to three national corporations, five states Department of Education, seven land-grant state universities, eight international agricultural universities, Southern Association of Schools and Colleges, United States Department of Agriculture-Foreign Agricultural Service, and United States Agency for International Development. Member of eight professional and honorary societies and Who's Who in American Education.

Specialties: Knowledge base in agricultural education and extension planning, needs assessment, evaluation, diffusion of innovation, and agricultural technology in a context of integrated technical and higher education, project management and community development around management of change, including value-chain development and integration innovation, research management, graduate education, and policy analysis.

GCS designed a pre-critical path method (PCPM[®]) that deploys three tools by which to understand priorities, sequence, agreement, and qualitative relationships within agricultural education and development. Q-methodology rank-orders development sequence of attributes associated with high performance. A Likert-type scale classifies associated statements according to agreement and contribution to the development path. Semi-structured qualitative interviews address four crosscutting constructs—cooperation, future view, receptivity to change, and sustainability.
